When the football had finished later that evening, Jamie's dad went to bed. Jamie was still furious. Too angry to sleep, he tossed and turned in bed. Jamie just couldn't handle not knowing the football score! He decided to sneak downstairs to find out. He slowly tiptoed down the stairs, carefully hopping over Charliedog who was sound asleep on the bottom step.

Jamie turned on the television. Luckily, his dad had recorded the match so he could watch it all from start to finish. As the final whistle blew, something caught Jamie's eye in the corner of the room. It was the sun rising! It was morning! Jamie had not slept a wink and he had a really important test at school!

Suddenly, Jamie heard his dad's alarm beeping upstairs. Jamie sprinted up the stairs and quickly jumped into bed, pretending to be asleep when his dad entered the room to wake him up. "Time to get up", Jamie's dad said gently. "We can watch the football together after school once you've finished that important test of yours!" he said. "I've even planned to cook your favourite dinner, I hate it when we fall out", Jamie's dad said with an apologetic look on his face.

Jamie suddenly felt a huge gush of guilt coming over him.

What advice would you give Jamie?

Do you think he should he snuck downstairs to watch the football match?

Justify your answer.

Finish the story.

Consider: Does Jamie tell his dad what he has done? Does Jamie do well at school?
